

Volleyball has shaped my life since I was eight years old. Now at 18, I can clearly see how much it has influenced who I am. Competing with NCR and Kairos Club since I was 12 taught me discipline, accountability, and leadership through years of training and high-level competition. Coming from a family where both parents played collegiate sports, I grew up understanding the commitment it takes to succeed.

I've earned recognition such as All-American honors, which reflects the consistency and effort I've put into the sport. Volleyball has also given me experiences beyond the court, including travel, new relationships, and learning how to perform under pressure and work within a team toward a shared goal.

Looking ahead, I plan to pursue a career in sales, where communication, confidence, and resilience are essential. The skills I've developed through volleyball translate directly into that environment, especially in handling challenges and building relationships.

I believe I deserve this scholarship because of my long-term dedication, the work I've invested over the years, and my commitment to applying what I've learned in sports toward a successful future beyond athletics.
