EVENTS-AT-A-GLANCE

ANSWERWRITE

Dependent upon the events for which you register, you may have to access two different websites that are set up for you. The first website we will show you is a website called AnswerWrite.

This site will be used for all competitions that are 100% objective with multiple choice or true/false questions, and for the objective portion of any events that are 50% objective and 50% application. And last, it will be used for all Open Events. Since most students participate in at least one open event, everyone will need to be familiar with this system.

When you first reach this site, you will login using your Participant ID and Password. Your participant ID is NOT the same as your Member ID. Again, your Participant ID is different from your Member ID. Your Participant ID and password will be provided to you from your chapter advisor. You will access the system by entering your participant ID and password and accepting the student agreement that you will be abide by the rules of the competition.

JUDGEPRO

If you are participating in an event that has materials that will be judged or graded in a somewhat manual manner, you will access your event via a website called JudgePro.

This website will be used to upload pre-submitted project materials and presentations. It will also be used to access tests and scenarios for competitions that will only be known to you on the actual day of your competition. Last, it will be used for events that are application/job based such as Microsoft Office-related events, programming events, and more.

When you reach this site, you will log in using your participant ID and password. Like the AnswerWrite website, remember your participant ID is NOT the same as your member ID. You will access the system by entering your participant ID and password and accepting the student agreement that you will be abide by the rules of the competition.
