Guidelines for Injured Players Missing Evaluations:

If a player is legitimately injured and can't participate in the assigned Evaluation period, the following information or opinions can be used to properly rate the player against his/her peers. Evidence of legitimate injury, such as a doctor's letter excusing the player from physical activity, must be provided.

- 1) Prior performance – If coaches can give a good assessment of player's ability, this can be taken into account when deciding teams.
- 2) Winter Workouts – If a player has participated in Winter Workouts, coaches can use what they saw during that time to help develop an opinion/evaluation.
- 3) Coaches can use outside opinions, but they must be documented for questions of integrity
- 4) If there is no way to judge a player (no past experience in program, did not attend workouts, or no one has seen the player, etc), then it is at the discretion of the League Director to proceed however they feel is necessary. An alternate date can be set for those who may have missed Evaluations.

When available, multiple sources of information should be obtained. Each case will be different, but priority should be making it as transparent and as fair as possible to all parties.

Injured players are highly encouraged to observe or be present at evaluations.
